'Planning for a Smarter Ireland'

The Irish Planning Institute is pleased to announce details of the National Planning Conference for 2010. The growth years of the Celtic Tiger have left a considerable legacy but how prepared is Ireland as it faces into a more uncertain future? The challenges of the next decade require us to embrace innovative thinking to build a more sustainable economic model, to improve and develop our urban areas and our physical and social infrastructure, and to build sustainable and inclusive communities. Planners must also adapt to increasingly complex roles which encourage economic and social development alongside the management of our physical environment. The next decade must be "smarter" to ensure we can develop our society to its full potential.

This year's conference will explore themes such as:

- the changing roles of local government and planning as we seek to develop a smarter economy and society;
- the challenge of dealing with some of the negative legacies of the recent economic downturn;
- the future for our town centres in more challenging times;
- developing smarter, more efficient transport solutions;
- how to encourage greater community involvement in planning and development and build social capital.

Conference Themes

DAY 1: Session One:

- The Role of Local Government in Developing Smarter Communities
- Capturing Innovation and Promoting Enterprise: A New Role for Planning
- Implementing the Green New Deal and Promoting Sustainable Recovery
- Cities as Drivers for Change

Session Two:

- Key Issues in Property Development and Transport
- Solutions to "Ghost Estates" and Empty Buildings - Views of the Planner and the Developer
- How "Smarter Travel" can deliver Smarter Communities

Evening: Conference Dinner

DAY 2: Session Three:

- The Future for Our Town Centres
- New Thinking in Town Centre Management
- What Communities Want from Planning – Views of a Councillor and an NGO

Session Four:
